Fast Facts: Dyslexia in Alabama

Alabama is home to 1.2 million children.

As many as 1 in 10
- or 120,000 -
have dyslexia.

35% of dyslexics will drop out of high school due to the lack of support.

That's 42,000 students whose outcomes we hope to change.

How We Help >

How You Can Help

$5 provides a teacher with professional development books to improve identification and intervention.

$25 gives a parent the opportunity to hear from leading researchers and dyslexia therapists about their child's diagnosis.

$50 provides a child with completely free reading intervention, tailored to their needs.

About Us

The Hettie Johnson Institute is run by a community of professional educators from Spring Valley School, a Birmingham-based college preparatory school for children with learning differences. We see the immense potential in our dyslexic students, and want to empower all Alabama students in the same way.

- 1 We use interventions approved by the International Dyslexia Association with our students in small, personalized settings.
- 2 We provide educators across the state of Alabama with online and in-person professional development opportunities to improve literacy instruction.
- 3 We train families in recognizing learning disabilities in their children, and give them tools and resources to help their child succeed.
- 4 We aim to do this at the lowest cost possible--ensuring all Alabama children receive the help they need.
